Tech Tip:

Streaming video has become one of the most common uses of your internet connection, whether it be YouTube, Netflix or a media player. This type of usage requires more bandwidth than any other usage and frequently will exhaust the capacity of your connection. Many of the streaming devices will default to display the video in 1080p, which may require more capacity than you have especially if others in the house are using the connection. Most of these media servers will allow you to select a lower resolution such as 780p or 480p, which will still provide DVD quality, but reduces the bandwidth requirement by a factor of 2-3 times or greater. This will reduce buffering and improve performance for everybody using the connection.
